

Peer-Review Guidelines Journal of Hematology Oncology Pharmacy (JHOP)

Target audience: Hematology oncology pharmacists

The following points highlight the most important issues relevant to the journal's objectives. Use specific comments: general comments, such as "a great article," are not helpful unless explained. All articles are edited for grammar and style, so focus on substance. Be clear: don't leave any room for guessing or misinterpretation. A good review ranges from 1 to 2 pages.

1. Your main goal is to ensure that all statements of fact are correct. Ex: If the authors say, "X and Y drugs are contraindicated," make sure these drugs are indeed contraindicated. If not, tell the authors they are not.

2. Be specific. Statements such as "not a significant contribution," or "clinically unimportant" are not useful unless you explain the reasons why this is so.

3. Suggest specific ways to correct things if you think the article has merit but requires modifications.

4. Key questions to consider: Case Report

- Is the manuscript appropriate for JHOP?
- Is this case unique or adds something to the literature?
- Does the Introduction adequately discuss the current literature?
- Is the case presentation clear and complete?
- Are the Tables and/or Figures appropriate? Is anything missing?
- Is the Conclusion valid based on the case presented?

5. References. Are references up-to-date and inclusive? Authors should provide the most recent references available post-2010 (except for "classic" sources).

6. Prioritize your comments. It helps to know what major issues should be addressed, and what comments are less critical to the acceptance of the article.

7. Be respectful of the authors, but don't "spare" them. Scholarship is not easy and criticism is not pleasant to receive. So be critical, but respectful. Don't be afraid to provide negative comments, but concrete suggestions on how to fix things are most useful. Make your comments the way you would want to receive criticism.

Thank you!
